Dan has tried and won more jury trials than any other attorney in Chicago representing the rail industry. He has represented railroads, real estate companies, manufacturers and other target defendants in civil litigation in federal and state courts on both a regional and national level for over 30 years. He founded Daley Mohan Groble in 1995 on the principal that attorneys should represent clients' businesses as rigorously and efficiently as if they were representing their own.

Dan spent the first ten years of his career with a Fortune 500 railroad company as a trial attorney, where he earned an exceptional record of jury verdict wins. He was then promoted into the company's business hierarchy, where he gained special insight and empathy for the challenges facing business management. Dan serves as national and regional counsel for publicly traded companies, as outside general counsel for privately held businesses and in leadership roles of national industry associations. He has been elected president of the National Association of Railroad Trial Counsel (NARTC), and has taught at and helped run a national trial college for the past decade.

Dan frequently instructs other attorneys and risk management personnel in investigation, litigation and trial practice strategies at national industry and association seminars and at client specific events. He is licensed to practice law in four mid-western states and handles and tries cases nationally.
